ANCIENT HISTORY

PROSOPOGRAPHIA PONTI EUXINI. BYZANTION

Abstract: The author presents the results of a work in progress research, respectively a prosopography on the population attested in the Greek cities of the Black Sea and Propontis (Prosopographia Ponti Euxini), focusing in this case (based on the epigraphic sources) on the population of Byzantion. As such, the paper will focus on the epigraphically attested quantitative data on the population of Byzantion, and on the qualitative data, covering the period between the first epigraphic attestations and up to the 3rd century AD. The work includes a prosopographical catalogue with the epigraphically attested population.

Keywords: epigraphy, prosopography, society, networks, Byzantion.

1. INTRODUCTION

Even though the ancient history of Byzantion (up to the 3rd century AD) has been vividly explored, from the early work of H. Merle,¹ and up to the work of K. Hanell² dedicated to Megarian colonies, as well as the more recent one of A. Robu,³ and T.J. Russell,⁴ more room has been left for deepening the research on Byzantion. Some of the researches on Byzantion have focused on the founding legends,⁵ the history of the city,⁶ its topography,⁷ its institutions,⁸ various economic⁹ and cultural¹⁰ aspects, the associative phenomenon,¹¹ or the corresponding anthroponymy.¹² Besides these, of reference is also the prosopographic work of L. Loukopoulou,¹³ who includes in her complex study on the history of Propontic Thrace also a prosopographical section on the population of Byzantion, focusing not only on the history of the city, but also on the prosopography and anthroponymy of the population (with 1090 entries). However, the approach of L. Loukopoulou did not focus especially on the prosopography, therefore there is room for more investigations, especially since more inscriptions have been published since 1989.

In this context, the goal of the Prosopographia Ponti Euxini. Byzantion (PPEB), as part of a larger individual research project (Prosopographia Ponti Euxini), has been to achieve a prosopographical work on Byzantium's population (based on the epigraphic sources), covering the period between the first epigraphic attestations and up to the 3rd century AD. The present study being its direct outcome, respectively a study on the population of Byzantium, which includes quantitative and qualitative analyses. The choice of Byzantium is due to its importance for the area, not only from the Later Antiquity but also in its early beginnings and up to the 3rd century AD.

The methodology has been developed and customised based on the analysis of similar research initiatives applied to other geographical areas,¹⁴ using also the newest research methodologies (implying the use of the Romans 1 by 1 database, Gephi for network analyses and visualisation). By including these innovative tools for the management, analysis and visualisation of the data which come from inscriptions,¹⁵ traditional prosopographical approaches are enhanced by identifying specific patterns or characteristics in social networks.

The first step of this endeavour implied the selection and insertion of all the inscriptions that provide information on the population of Byzantium (from the first epigraphic attestations and up to the 3rd century AD) in the prosopographical database Romans 1 by 1 (it now includes a section for the Greek world), which allows open-access to the information for anyone interested. Considering the goal of our initiative, excluded have been those inscriptions that record kings (e.g. IByzantium 5 that is dedicated to Antigonos Monophthalmos, or IByzantium 6 dedicated to Demetrios Poliorketes), emperors, as well as the evidence from the fragmentary inscriptions (such as the votive ones) and from those inscriptions that do not render with certainty evidence on the population. The next step implied the preparation of the prosopographical catalogue, based on which further analyses and interpretations were made.

2. BRIEF HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION

Byzantium was founded¹⁶ in the 7th century BC (probably in 660 BC, the literary sources offering different dates¹⁷), by Megarians with the help of some inhabitants originating from Argos, Beotia, Carystos and Corith.¹⁸ The city was located in a "favourable geographical position from both a military and an economic point of view",¹⁹ comprising in its territory Athyra, Delkos-Derkos, Rhegion and Selymbria (the latter beginning with the Imperial period²⁰).

Considering its location, the city had continuous conflicts with the Thracian tribes located in the vicinity,²¹ and over the centuries it took part in various conflicts (e.g. the Ionian Revolt, against Sparta etc.). Later on, in the 2nd century AD, another important moment for Byzantium was its downgrade as a village of Perinthos by the emperor Caracalla and this due to the fact that it had supported Pescennius Niger.²²

Due to natural factors, the city controlled the navigation "from the north through the Bosphoros",²³ and it influenced also the migration of "spawning mackerel and tuna"²⁴ from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean Sea. The coins commonly depict dolphins and tridents, as a way of underlining the maritime and harbor character of the city.²⁵ The importance of the fish industry for the city led to its identification as Θυννίδος μητρόπολις,²⁶ while other authors were more mocking, considering Byzantium as the armpit of Greece.²⁷

The patron god was most likely Apollo,²⁸ which is to be seen also through the popularity of the personal names derived from the name of the god, but Artemis was also popular, just like in other Megarian colonies,²⁹ having also a sanctuary in the city.³⁰ The deity was worshiped with the epicleses Orthosia (Megarian epiclesis³¹) and Phosphoros, in the latter instance the celebration Bosphoria was organised in her name,³² implying torch races, as one of the inscriptions attests it.³³ The pantheon present at Byzantium was common to that of Megara³⁴ and the other Megarian colonies, including besides Apollo and Artemis also Zeus, Poseidon, Demeter, Dionysos etc.

3. OVERVIEW OF THE DATA

Considering the type of investigation, it is important to mention that all such initiatives do not claim to render with accuracy the number of the real population, which is impossible to reconstruct solely based on the epigraphic sources, being possible only through approximation and by using the information provided by other related disciplines, such as archaeology, through specific researches on the size of the habitation area over the centuries, or through anthropological analyses. However, such an approach is useful because it provides an overview of the existing epigraphic evidence, which certainly reveals various blind spots (or "dark numbers"³⁵), such as the non-representativeness of specific juridical categories (e.g. slaves, who despite not being very often named in inscriptions are sometimes represented on the funerary monuments, being not only part of a funerary motif, but also a demographic reality), or certain age categories (e.g. children – they are recorded by the inscriptions most often following their death). these shortcomings, the data is useful because it points to epigraphic habits, showing who is more prone to leave traces of their existence, and in which manner (does one express more often his piety towards gods, or rather their sorrow for the death of a family member?). The necropolis was archaeologically researched therefore this is the reason why it provides most of the evidence.

The relevant inscriptions for our investigation come not only from ancient Byzantion (see Fig. 1), but also from its territory, which however provides only a small sample of the data. From a chronological perspective (see Fig. no. 2), a significant number of inscriptions (116 + 33 from Imperial Selymbria) are dated to the 1st – 3rd century AD, but the great majority come from the period between the 4th and the 1st century BC (226), the best represented century being the 2nd century BC (68 inscriptions) and the 2nd-1st century BC (68 inscriptions). An overwhelming majority (369/410) of inscriptions are funerary, and most of them are very laconic in content, providing only information on the name of the deceased and maybe the name of the person (most often a family member) who dedicated the monument to him. More exceptionally there are also funerary inscriptions that include reference to fines in case that the grave was violated,³⁶ which was a more common practice in other parts of the ancient world. Besides the funerary inscriptions, there are also various honorary inscriptions (14/410) for some individuals (not only for the Imperial family or kings), dedications (16/410), and even a seating inscription in the stadion,³⁷ or an agonistic inscription.³⁸ In what concerns the types of monuments (mostly steles, but also some sarcophagi and altars), around half of them are made of marble, some are made of limestone, but we have no information on the material of a significant number of monuments, therefore in this case the correlation between the types of monuments and the profile of individuals is not representative. As expected for this part of the ancient world, the predominant language of the inscriptions is Greek (403) with only a few (7) inscriptions written in Latin and no bilingual inscriptions. This is of course not surprising considering the city we are dealing with; the Latin inscriptions being attested in the 3rd century AD. To this sample we add also the 33 inscriptions coming from Imperial Selymbria, period in which the former polis became part of the territory of Byzantion. All these inscriptions are in Greek, being votive or funerary inscriptions.

4. PEOPLE OF BYZANTION

In what concerns the population, the inscriptions record 998 individuals (1055 with the 57 persons from Imperial Selymbria) for the period between the 5th century BC and the 3rd century AD, which is a rather small number, if compared to other important Greek cities in the Black Sea area, such as Tomis for example (well over 1000 individuals). However, the attested number is influenced by various aspects, first of all by the intensity of the archaeological researches (influenced in its turn by the overlapping of the modern cities), not only by the intensity of the habitation and the epigraphic manifestation.

Most of the population is attested between the 2nd and 1st century BC and even though our focus is solely on the epigraphic evidence attested at Byzantion, the number of Byzantion's population can be further improved by adding the population that is attested outside of Byzantion, in other cities of the ancient world, and by adding also the evidence from the literary and numismatic sources. In total, according to the PPEE, there are 332³⁹ persons (up to the 3rd century AD) who originate from Byzantion but are attested elsewhere, mostly at Athens (72), on the Samothracian Island (33), at Delphi (22) and at Delos (21), respectively in some of the most important cities of the Classical and Hellenistic period.

When looking closer at the ancient population of Byzantion, several aspects can help us in reconstructing each individual profile. First of all, there is the gender distribution (see Fig. 3) and it is not surprising to note that most of the attested individuals are male (768/998),⁴⁰ which corresponds to an epigraphic habit specific for the ancient world, women being underrepresented in epigraphy, being epigraphically “visible” especially upon their death. At Byzantion there are 209 women (the gender of 21 individuals could not be established) and they are mostly mentioned in the inscriptions that commemorate them, even though in some instances they appear as responsible for commemorating their close ones, or for making dedications to the gods, some along with their families (61/209), a more common stance in which we find them all over the ancient world. The iconography of the monuments pertaining to women and men is an important differentiating aspect, the elements represented being common for most steles with these types of representations;⁴¹ as such, on the monuments of women commonly represented are bottles of perfumes, mirrors, combs, jewelry boxes, wool baskets;⁴² while on the monuments of men, commonly depicted are volumina, shelves, bags.⁴³

In what concerns the population, the onomastic points to a preponderant Greek stratum, with Thracian and Bithynian elements, and as underlined by D. Dana,⁴⁴ the Thracian element does not seem to be so marginal, as considered by L. Loukopoulou.⁴⁵ In what concerns the personal names/cognomina of the family members, they are in most cases from a similar register (Greek personal name and patronymic), but there are also cases that point towards possible mixed-marriages (Ζώπυρος son of Απολλόδωρος; Μοκαπορις son of Μόσχος; Τατις daughter of Διόδωρος; Γλύκων son of Μουκάπορις; Ἑρμίας son of Ἀμάτοκος; Μήνιος son of Διλίπορις). In addition to the Greek and Thracian population, the inscriptions attest also a few foreigners, ³⁹ I have taken into consideration only those persons attested up to the 3rd century AD (47 are attested after this period).

⁴⁰ Additional to this data is the one from Imperial Selymbria (57 persons), from where come seven women and 50 men.

who settled there but came from closer or farther away areas (exclusively from the Greek world): Θεόδωρος Δομιτίου Βειθύνιον, Χρύσιον Ἐπικράτους Ἡερακλεῶτις, Φαίκων Ἀρτεμιδώρου Καλλατιανός, Ἀγάθων Ἀγάθωνος Κῶος, Ἰατροκλῆς Αἰνήτου Μυλασσέυς, and at Selymbria Διογένης son of Κλήμης, a βουλευτής from Anchialos. To these we can also add the indirect evidence on the negotiatores whose families originated from other parts of the ancient world, but who established at Byzantion later on (see below). One of the judges, Ἀπολλωνίδας son of Μέμνων, was from Mylassa but died at Byzantion and was buried at public expenses; but he is not the only foreign judge attested here; Ἰατροκλῆς Αἰνήτου Μυλασσέυς was also a judged, who received the proxeny on behalf of Byzantion for his work. Certainly, in these cases we may assume wider networks, which can be traced only partially, but they are mostly outside the family circle; the persons being mentioned for their contributions or profession. On the other way around, as mentioned above, an important number of Byzantioi is atested abroad, in other Greek cities,⁴⁶ some of whom received the proxeny in the respective cities.⁴⁷

Furtheron, age is also an important information in reconstructing the profile of Byzantion's population. This information is however very rarely recorded in the inscriptions, but includes the phenomenon of age rounding. From our sample of 998 individuals, only 63 (and another one from Imperial Selymbria) have their age mentioned, according to the following age groups:

Age group	No. of persons
Under 5 yrs.	3
6-10 yrs.	4
11-20 yrs.	10
21-40 yrs.	21
41-60 yrs.	9
61-70 yrs.	3
71-80 yrs.	8
Unknown	5

Unlike other cases from nearby areas (e.g. the province Moesia Inferior), there are no attestations of persons whom supposedly lived over 80 years old, the best represented category being the one between 21-40 years old. Children are underrepresented and yet again the data proves to be laconic, we find no reference of the reasons for their death, which in other cities (we bring again the example of Tomis) is present, especially when death occurred in more extraordinary circumstances (e.g. death at birth, death following an illness).

Occupation is another important identity component⁴⁸ of a person and, surprisingly, at Byzantion the inscriptions mentioning them are not very numerous; however the attested occupations come from different sectors, more precisely mentioned are: a γραμματεύς,⁴⁹ two δικασταί,⁵⁰ a ἰατρεινῆ,⁵¹ a τίτθα,⁵² an οἰκιακός, an οἰκονόμος,⁵³ a μορμίλων,⁵⁴ a ναυπηγός, several negotiatores (implied from the context), a γραμματικὸς⁵⁵ and a παιδαγωγός,⁵⁶ besides these there are four (or five based on the iconography – see below) Roman soldiers, a bucinator Legionis I,⁵⁷ an aquilifer Legionis II,⁵⁸ a *οπτίων*⁵⁹ and at Selymbria a στρατιώτης of the Cohors XI Urbana.⁶⁰ The negotiatores belong to distinct families,⁶¹ the evidence for this profession being indirect, based on the family's origin. Considering the importance of fishing and commerce for the region it is surprising that there are no further attestations of such occupations, especially by wealthy practitioners, such as the above-mentioned families. However (rather rarely), the iconography of some monuments offers further evidence on occupations, the representations being connected to the profession of the deceaseds, marking their identity. Through the iconography one is able to identify two sailors as bows are reproduced on the monuments;⁶² out of the two persons one might have been military personnel as there is also a sword on the monument.

Another important aspect is the anthroponymy of Byzantion's population, which has been addressed on several occasions, not only by L. Robert,⁶³ but also by O. Masson,⁶⁴ D. Dana,⁶⁵ and A. Robu⁶⁶ among others. Considering this, in the following lines we will discuss only some of the characteristics. As expected, from a statistical point of view, the inscriptions record mostly Greek personal names, followed by Thracian and Bithynian personal names attested all along the centuries⁶⁷ (e.g.: Δαδας, Ζώπυρος, Κότυς, Μοκαζοιρη, Μοκαπορις, Τατις, Nebridius, Zanax), and some Latin cognomina from the 2nd century AD. Only 89 persons have a duo or tria nomina or praenomina but no nomina. The evidence points to the nomenclature being composed of the personal name and the patronymic, but also (in some cases) of the hekatostys to which the respective citizen belonged to.⁶⁸

Theophoric Greek personal names are very frequent, among these, the most popular personal names derive from the name of the following deities: Dionysos (Βακίων,

At the opposite end, there is only one personal name derived from Hecate, a rather inauspicious name, which is seldom used all over the ancient world. Even though Artemis is a popular deity at Byzantium, her name and epithets are also rarely used, nonetheless there are some cases: e.g. the common personal name Ἀρτεμίδωρος, or the less common personal name Φωσφόρος.⁶⁹

There are also non-theophoric personal names which are rare not only for the Pontic and Propontic regions but also for the ancient world in general. One such name is that of Αἰσχρα,⁷⁰ probably derived from the adjective αἰσχρός (shameful, ugly), which does not make it a popular personal name and is encountered only in a dozen cases in the Greek world. In this particular case, the choice of this personal name is due, as proposed by L. Robert,⁷¹ to it being in contrast with the personal name of the father: Ἐπίνικος. Rare as well, but with a more desirable meaning, is also the personal name Χρυσόπολις,⁷² along with other derivatives from the word gold attested at Byzantium: Χρῦσα, Χρυσέα, Χρῦσιον or Χρυσίον. The feminine personal name Παρμενίσκα and its masculine correspondent Παρμενίσκος (whose patronymic is Ἡρόδοτος) are also seldomly encountered at Byzantium, but despite their rarity, the woman and the man bearing them are not necessarily related, as the inscriptions come from the 3rd⁷³ and 2nd century BC;⁷⁴ however, this possibility cannot be excluded either since it could have been passed from one generation to the other (on which we have no further evidence). There are also some personal names that point to a specific occupation, even though the bearer did not necessarily profess it: such a name is Τίτθα, attested twice.

Megarian personal names are present in all of the Megarian colonies,⁷⁵ including at Byzantium.⁷⁶ Among these names we have Ἀθαναίων, Βοσπόριχος, Βόσπων, Ἥρις, Καθαρά, Καλλιγεῖτων, Μενδίδωρος,⁷⁷ some of them being previously discussed in the literature. The personal names Βοσπόριχος and Βόσπων derive, of course, from the Bosphoros,⁷⁸ both names being attested mostly at Byzantium and being epichoric in nature (there is the month Bosporios and the celebration Bosporia⁷⁹).

Among the more uncommon name practices, worthy of mention is the homonymy of four members of the same family⁸⁰ (grandfather, son, two grandsons): Βοσπόριχος son of Βοσπόριχος. As in all of the ancient cities, homonymy is present at Byzantium as well, the case of the family members of Βοσπόριχος mentioned above being representative. In general, there are few instances in which overlappings of identity due to homonymy might occur, the personal name and the patronymics being usually different, or as in this case, despite the homonym one can tell the difference in identities. Nevertheless, the cases of homonymy are not that numerous (homonym not only of personal names but also of the patronymic) of the epigraphically attested population. If some persons are easily identifiable as homonymous (for example there are two mentions of a Ὑγεῖα daughter of Εὐκλέων, but despite the rare personal name and patronymic, and the similar dating, they are two different persons and this because they are both mentioned on the funerary monuments dedicated to them), others are not so easily distinguished (e.g. the two Ἀπολλόδωρος son of Διονύσιος; and the two Διονύσιος, father of Ἀπολλόδωρος). In other cases, due to the sons and fathers bearing the same personal name and to the laconic content of the inscriptions, we cannot identify who is the father and who is the son (e.g. Καλλιγεῖτων son of Ματρόδωρος and Ματρόδωρος son of Καλλιγεῖτων).

Exceptional are also those cases in which the cognomen is an ethnicon, such as Βυζαντεῖνος (Γάιος Ἰούλιος Βυζαντεῖνος), or [Μακ]εδών[ς]). Sometimes the ethnicon is further added, as in the case of Αὐρηλία Μάρθα Βυζαντία, or Ἀττική Βυζαντία daughter of Χρυσέρως. In addition to the exceptional cases is also the faulty use of the tria/duo nomina, as in the example of Ἐρμίας Ἐγγάτιος, whose nomen is recorded after the cognomen. In other situations, besides the Latin cognomen written in Greek follows a Greek personal name, as in the case of Καίπιον Θεόφιλος. Frequent is also the use of Latin praenomina or nomina as personal names, e.g. Μάρκος, and especially for the 3rd century AD elite⁸¹ we see the use of more than one cognomen, e.g. [Αὐρήλιος] Σεκουνδεῖνος Διόγνητος, Αὐρήλιος Σαβεινιανός Κυνιτιανός, Αὔλος Ἀττυληνός Βάσιλος, Πόπλιος Μέμμιος Πλαυτιανός Ματρόδωρος etc.

Worthy of mention are also the few (seven) agnomina, encountered both in the case of women and men (mostly): Γαῦρος, ὁ καὶ Γάϊος, son of Φιλώτας; Δ[---], ὁ καὶ Βάσσος, son of ignotus; Διόδωρος, ὁ καὶ Καλλίστρατος, son of ignotus; Διονύσις, ὁ καὶ Πόπλις, son of Μενίσκος; Αὐρήλιος Πολύτιμος, ὁ καὶ Πρεστάντιος; Δημοκρατία, ἡ καὶ Παρθενική, daughter of Δίων; Αὐρηλία Θεοφίλα, ἡ καὶ Θεοτεῖμα, daughter of Αὐρήλιος Πόπλιος Θεόφιλος. In the case of men, we see a predominance of Latin agnomina, two of which being actually praenomina/nomina.

5. NETWORKS AT BYZANTIUM AND BEYOND

Unfortunately, considering the preponderance of funerary monuments, there are only a few connections outside the family circle which can be pointed out, as in the above cases of professionals, in the case of persons joining religious associations, or in those cases where persons travel to/from Byzantium (see above and below). The great majority record especially family relations (from the nuclear or extended family), and very rarely other type of relations. When it comes to the nuclear family, very rare in the ancient world is the mentioning of adoptions,⁸² and in Byzantium we have one such example:⁸³ Θεόδωρος son of Ἐπικράτης, a certain Δομίτιος being his adoptive father; we further know that he was from Bithynion, that he studied in Athens and then moved to Byzantium, where he died. Exceptional (only two instances) is also the recording of filiation through the metronymic: Δαμώ daughter of Νικό⁸⁴ and Παρθένυ daughter of Φι[---],⁸⁵ and this due to the fact that the mothers were peregrinae and the fathers Roman citizens, therefore from the Roman legal point of view the children had only their mothers.⁸⁶ Deductive information may sometimes point to family, as such when individuals have rare patronymic we may presume they are related, even though they are attested through different inscriptions but in a similar chronological frame; this could be the case of Κτημένη⁸⁷ and Ματρόδωρος⁸⁸ who both bear the patronymic Ματρᾶς.

As mentioned, from a statistical point of view the nuclear family is the best represented, followed by the extended family, including therefore mentions of: husbands and wives,⁸⁹ fathers and sons/daughters; mothers and sons/daughters; brothers and sisters. Out of these, the relation between fathers and sons is the most attested and this of course due to the mentioning of at least the filiation in inscriptions, which leads also to the mentioning of at least two or three generations, depending on whom was the subject. Considering the importance of filiation and the fact that we are dealing mostly with funerary inscriptions, this trend is present all over the centuries. Next as overall number of attestations are examples which point to more extended family relations, for example to grandfathers and grandsons/granddaughters, sons/daughters and fathers/mothers-in-law, brothers-in-law and some slaves. Certainly, the most extended family and external network is that of Κόιντος Λόλλιος from Rhegion (see below), the members of the family being possibly merchants and certainly actively involved in a private religious association devoted to Dionysos.⁹⁰ Besides this evidence, the funerary monuments sometimes also have iconographic representations of family members, even though they are not mentioned by the text; however, it would be risky to approximate the real number based on the iconography of the monuments.

Less frequent are the mentions of networks outside the family, such as “fellow professionals” (4 cases), employee (1 case⁹¹), friends (2 cases), heir (1 case) which appear only in

⁹¹ IByzantium 185. In this case we might be dealing with a freedman because the individual, an οἰκονόμος, was mentioned on his funerary monument specific epigraphical contexts; for example, two of the “fellow professionals” (a judge and his secretary) are attested in a proxeny decree⁹² in which the services that the two provided to the city were rewarded (however, the secretary was not granted the citizenship). Two other “fellow professionals” were both aquiliferi of the Legio II Adiutrix Pia Fidelis. Besides these examples of relations between individuals, there are also unreadable or unspecified relations between individuals, which could not be established with more precision due to the laconic or fragmentary character of the inscriptions.

A more extended network was also characteristic not only for the various professionals (e.g. the military personnel, the negotiatores etc.), but also for those persons who at Byzantium and in other parts of the ancient world, joined private associations, some having also an occupational component related to the prosperous fishing industry. Eleven inscriptions record the associative phenomenon at Byzantium or in its territory, some of which are devoted to Dionysos, with the epicleses Κάλλων and Παράβολος.⁹³ In this latter case, the epiclesis of the divinity comes from the lake with the same name, pointing to a possible association of fishermen who carried their activity on it. The members of the association seem to belong to two or three families, and the existing positions point to the existence of athletic competitions.

Another fragmentary inscription records a decree from which one can read the name Διονυσοβολειτῶν,⁹⁴ as well as that of a woman, Οὐλοσεια Κλαυδιανή, who might have been either a member, or a benefactress of the association. The name of the association is composed of the name of the protective deity (Dionysos) and the term βόλος which indicates the action of throwing the net by the fishermen. Both this association and the association devoted to Διονύσιος Παράβολος were considered by L. Robert⁹⁵ as a single association, whose members were fishermen; the chronology of the inscriptions, the occupational profile of the members, as well as the tutelary divinity seem to support this hypothesis, however certain is the fact that the members were either fishermen, or were active in the fish commerce.⁹⁶

Besides these associations, at Rhegion there is also the association of Μύσται Διονύσου Κάλλωνος, attested through six inscriptions during the 1st-2nd century AD.⁹⁷ The epiclesis Κάλλων comes either from a toponym (Callum),⁹⁸ or from the concept of “beauty” τὸ καλόν.⁹⁹ Here again the positions inside the association seem to indicate activities inside the gymnasium, as well as sport and musical competitions.¹⁰⁰

Two further associations of Μύσται are attested here, but the inscriptions are fragmentary. In both cases the members are differentiated, as such in the first association there are μύσται and θιασεῖται,¹⁰¹ while in the other there are μύσται and πρεσβύτεροι;¹⁰² these distinctions probably pointing, according to Jaccottet,¹⁰³ to two sections inside the associations.

Additionally, there was also an association of worshippers of Zeus Athirios, composed of around 32 κωμῆται (inhabitants of a village) from the territory of Byzantion. Roman citizens are mentioned as members and among these there also members of the Lusii family: Λούκιος Λουσίος Λουκιανός, Λουσία Σατορνείνη, Λούκιος Λουσίος Σατορνίνος, whose exact relation escapes us.

Overall, even though for a city like Byzantion the intensity of the associative phenomenon is not that impressive we do notice the interconnectivity of individuals based on common occupations, social and religious practices which go beyond the family appurtenance.

The extension of ones' network was certainly influenced by occupation and by the overall social position and social capital that one had in their smaller or bigger universe. As such, one possible category of persons with an extended network is that of the literates. An example is that of the γραμματικός Θεόδωρος son of Ἐπικράτης and adoptive son of Δομίτιος. Θεόδωρος was from Bithynion but he moved to Athens where he became renowned, and later at Byzantion where he obtained his glory, which could have also lead to his adoption. The deceased was well-educated, as points the epigram as well as the iconography of the monument dedicated to him by Λούκουλλος.¹⁰⁴ Even though we focused on the epigraphic sources, some Byzantinoi attested by literary sources are worthy of mention in this context since due to their education and profession they have developed important networks in cities such as Athens or Alexandria, changing their place of residence either permanently (for their education and/or for their professional activity) or only temporarily. The literates of antiquity (including those of Byzantion) have been thoroughly researched and included in works focusing on these aspects, and for the Black Sea and Byzantion we nominate especially the ones of M. Dana.¹⁰⁵

Among these examples of well interconnected literates, with extended networks and significant social capital, we nominate those who were educated or who professed at Athens, or in other important centres of the ancient world. Among these we have Theodoros of Byzantion,¹⁰⁶ rhetor and sophist connected to the 5th century BC political elite, but in a notorious environment was also included the philosopher Leon of Byzantion,¹⁰⁷ who was the student of Plato and friend with Phocion, the strategos of Athens (322-318 BC). Besides Athens, Alexandria was also a popular place for their relocation, it is here that we have Aristophanes son of Apelles of Byzantion in the stance of tutor of king Ptolemy V.¹⁰⁸ Present at the court of Alexandria was also Philon of Byzantion, an engineer and mathematician.

These are the more fortunate cases on which we are lucky to find further information as the literary sources have survived; in this context we should note the biased character of the sources, and treat them as such, respectively they reveal needed glimpses of the past population and society.

6. GLIMPSES ON THE SOCIETY OF BYZANTION

Based on the available evidence, the information on the structure of society at Byzantion is limited (diachronically or not), and this due to the fact that on the one hand the sources are very scarce for some centuries, and on the other hand due to the predominance of funerary inscriptions which reveal limited information outside the family core.

Certainly, at Byzantion the society was hierarchical, the population being differentiated first of all based on juridical status. The inscriptions allow us to differentiate between citizens of Byzantion, Roman citizens later on, freedmen (ἀπελεύθερος¹⁰⁹), as well as private (i.e. ἐγγενής¹¹⁰) and public slaves (Θαλλίωv¹¹¹ Ἐπαφρόδιτος¹¹²), including θρεπτοί.¹¹³ During the democracy, the constitution implied that citizenship at Byzantion was granted only to those whose both parents were citizens, but according to Aristotel (Arist. Oec. 1346b 26-29) following a financial crisis, citizenship was granted also to those who paid 30 minas for it. New citizens could choose their belonging to a specific subdivision.¹¹⁴ Nevertheless, as the sources seem to point, this was probably only a temporary exception from the rule.¹¹⁵

During the Hellenistic and Imperial times there is evidence for the civic body to have been divided (in an unknown number of) *hekatostyes*¹¹⁶ (Βαθωνία, Φιλοκτηρία, Κρατεινήα, Καλλιχορῆς, Διονυσία, Κεραμῆα, Δευτέρα, Εἰσι[-]). Since the population was divided into hekatostyes, it was also probably divided into tribes,¹¹⁷ which are however not mentioned by the sources. At Byzantion the hieromnamon is the eponymous official, while the basileus is probably only a life magistracy.¹¹⁸ These officials, as well as the members of the collective bodies, such as the members of the council (*pentekaideka*¹¹⁹), as well as the *stratego*¹²⁰ are part of the upper echelon of society, and among them we have the following examples: Ἔστιαῖος, Ἥρις son of Ἀθάνιχον and Μητροδωρος son of Λάσιος (eponymous officials of the city).¹²¹ the existence of around 89 Roman citizens, some freedmen, 36 being attested in the period between the 2nd and the 1st century BC. Among these early Roman citizens, we mention Μάρκος Ὠλιος Διογένης, who received the citizenship from a Marcus Olius, maybe originating from Campania where the name is to be found in the Republican period.¹²² There are no other Olii attested at Byzantion or in its nearby. From the same period, we have the first attestation of the Lolli (through Λολλία daughter of Ῥαδινός at Selymbria,¹²³ Λολλία Σαλβία at Byzantion), probably a family of merchants¹²⁴ who came to Byzantion and who was still present there and in the nearby area later on, in the 1st century AD, through Κόϊντος Λόλλιος [---] (Rhegion), Λολλία Κάτυλλα (Rhegion), Διόδωρος (Rhegion), Λολλία Πασσερηνία (Byzantion), Λόλλιος Τίτος (Selymbria).

From the 1st century BC we mention representatives of the Atti: Κοϊντος Ἄττιος Ἡρακλίδης, a Greek as the cognomen points, who possibly received the citizenship from Q. Attius Varus, praefectus equitum of Caesar in Gallia (around 51 BC), or from a member of his family.¹²⁵ Κοϊντος Ἄττιος Ἡρακλίδης might have been also related to Τίτος Ἄτιος son of Τίτος, who is attested around the same time, but in the territory of Byzantion.

Most of the evidence comes from the period between the 2nd and 3rd century AD, 16 persons receiving the Roman citizenship following the edict of Caracalla. From the 2nd century AD we have at Byzantion also the Trebellii: Μάρκος Τρεβέλλιος Μάξιμος both homonyms of Britain's governor from the second half of the 1st century AD (AD 63-69);¹²⁶ they, along with Φλάβιος Τρεβέλλιος Μάξιμος might have received the citizenship from Britain's governor or from one of his family members.

Sometimes in the Imperial period we have also the Caesonii, who were involved in trade and are attested also in Bithynia.¹²⁷ Their precise relations and further networks are difficult to disentangle due to the fragmentary state of the inscription. Αἰλία Ἰουλία Κα[ισωνία] possibly had three gentilicia, but Κα[---] might have come also from a cognomen, e.g. Καισωνία.¹²⁸ Λουκία Καισωνία has two gentilicia probably the two coming from both parents. As far as we can tell, Λούκιος Καισώνιος and Λουκία Καισωνία could have been father and daughter, but also brothers, and the type of relation would determine their further relation with Νεικώ, another family member mentioned in the inscription.

In the case of the few attested public slaves, the personal name is followed by the ethnic in genitive (Αντίγονος Βυζαντίων, Θαλλίων Βυζαντίων, Ἐπαφρόδιτος Βυζαντίων).¹²⁹ Besides the explicit mentioning of slaves, the iconography of the monuments helps us further identifying other cases, being a frequent motif at Byzantion,¹³⁰ but this type of evidence must be treated cautiously since the representations of slaves in the funerary banquet scene¹³¹ is a common funerary motif and only in some cases it is also a demographic reality.

As rarely a person is attested in two or more inscriptions, there is no evidence of clear vertical mobility over the decades, but this is certainly the case for some families who at a specific point (before AD 212) received the Roman citizenship.

All in all, from a statistical point of view, the (diachronic) categorisation of the population based on juridical appurtenance is not relevant as the epigraphic evidence is truncated and points to only some slaves and freedmen, these categories being much proner not to manifest themselves epigraphically.

7. CONCLUSIONS

At the end of this investigation we have obtained a glimpse on the population and society of Byzantion, as it results from the epigraphic sources. The population attested from the 4th century BC and up to the 3rd century AD is not so numerous when compared to other Greek cities (e.g. Tomis), the evidence certainly revealing “blind spots”, such as the non-representativeness of women (including on funerary monuments), and of certain juridical categories (e.g. slaves), these are, however, epigraphic habits specific for the ancient world. The predominance of laconic funerary monuments provides truncated information, with a focus on the nuclear and extended family, mostly citizens of Byzantion. But the epigraphic evidence points also to the wider existing networks in society, from those between persons sharing a common cult, to those sharing a common profession, these being, along with the political elite, the category of persons best represented in Byzantion's society. Underrepresented are (as expected) women and children, whose existence, just as in the case of slaves is not only a funerary motif but a demographic reality.

Overall, despite the fact that the sources are not comprehensive, they do help in reconstructing the profile of Byzantion's population, the attested members of society pertaining to all categories, but rarely do we have multiple evidence on their personal history and wider connections.

¹³² The individuals are recorded in the alphabetical order of their personal names/cognomina. The fragmentary or missing personal names have been recorded at the end. The catalogue consists of 998 persons, to which we add the 57 persons from Imperial Selymbria. It differs from the one of LGPN, where there are 1183 and this due to the fact that the LGPN includes also the persons from the 4th-6th centuries AD; the persons originating from Byzantion but attested outside of Byzantion; as well as the persons from the literary sources, from the numismatic sources and from various unpublished inscriptions. The catalogue of Loukopoulou counts 1090 individuals from Byzantion, including also the 4th-6th centuries AD and the evidence from literary sources. In the Romans 1 by 1 database have been inserted only those individuals who were the subjects of the inscriptions; as such, often the parents (who provide the filiation) do not do not have a Romans 1 by 1 reference link.
